Our solar system consists of not only our star, the Sun, and the eight planets, but a lot of other things.

First, there are many satellites. A satellite is any small body orbiting a larger one. The moon is Earth's natural satellite. There are also many artificial satellites orbiting Earth, which are used for observation and communication.

Within the space of our solar system are also countless asteroids. Asteroids are chunks of rock or metal that range in size from small planets to grains of sand. The heaviest concentration is the asteroid belt, where thousands orbit the sun between Jupiter and Mars. Sometimes, asteroids enter the Earth's atmosphere. We call these meteors.

Our solar system is also host to comets. Comets are chunks of rock, ice, and gas—that pass through our space. Occasionally we can see their telltale vapour tail. The best-known of these is Haley's Comet, which passes into our view every 76 years. Its next sighting should occur in 2061. <https://www.dudelhi.com>
