Road safety is a crucial issue, and it is the duty of parents to educate their children about how they must follow traffic rules and signs while negotiating traffic on the road.

In major metro cities of India, every year, an entire week is dedicated to the observation of road safety measures. The Transport departments of different states bring out catchy slogans, put up posters and distribute leaflets in schools and colleges to create awareness regarding road safety.

Many of us have a habit of running across a road and disregarding traffic signals that often results in horrific accidents. By knowing and practicing pedestrian rules, we can at least make sure of remaining unhurt.

When young, children generally imbibe everything that they see. Consequently, if they are taught how they should behave or walk on the road at an early age, they develop awareness and behave in a way that helps them to avoid accidents. After all, they are the future of the world.

We must know the significance of zebra crossings and should make a habit of using them while crossing the road, which is not seen very often on Indian roads, unfortunately.

It is not only when walking but while driving too that we must strictly follow certain rules like wearing seat belts, maintaining a safe distance from another vehicle and not over-speeding so as to ensure that no accidents occur on the road.

There are three types of road safety signs — mandatory, cautionary and informatory that enlighten us about the condition of the road ahead and instruct us regarding what we need to do at relevant junctions and crossroads. By paying attention to these signs and remaining alert at all times, we can ensure that we do not run into problems.

A death constitutes the greatest irreparable loss and generates a void that can never be filled. And when it happens due to a moment of carelessness on the street, there is no assuaging the grief. Hence, conscious efforts should be taken by everyone so that each one of us, when we are out of our homes may return safely.
