Read the passage and answer the questions that follow :

Among all the gifts you can gift a child, there is none more likely to add richness than a book. Not a book but the habit of reading. Give him the habit of reading and that too with discrimination and you have done something for which he may be thankful to you for all his life. Books should be the daily companions of the child's life. And they ought not to be associated with the school. Don't make him feel that reading is a task, a lesson. It is the fun he gets out of reading that needs to be emphasized. Let him enjoy reading that needs to be emphasized.
